Partnering with local food banks across the United States to ensure that families in need have a holiday meal to enjoy, Carvana is rallying customers and local community members to spread holiday cheer by dropping off canned goods at its Car Vending Machines through December 19.

"Carvana is dedicated to serving our local communities," said Allison Andrews, Brand Manager, Activation and Community for Carvana. "We believe in treating people better, and the holidays can trigger financial stress and food insecurity for those struggling. We are excited to promote our Happy Haulerdays™ campaign at our Car Vending Machine locations this year, and to give back more to families in need this holiday season."

Customers, Carvana team members, and area residents may drop off nonperishable goods to benefit their local food pantry and community ahead of the winter holidays, even if they aren't purchasing a vehicle. All types of nonperishable items are accepted for donation. The most needed items include peanut butter, canned soups/chilis, canned meat, and shelf stable pasta and sauces. Participating Car Vending Machine locations include Atlanta, Austin, Chicago, Cleveland, Washington D.C./Gaithersburg, Detroit, Dallas, San Antonio, Raleigh, Greensboro, Jacksonville, Kansas City, Las Vegas, Nashville, Oklahoma City, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Houston, Tempe, and Glendale.

Carvana was named the No. 2 automotive brand in the U.S. as designated by the Forbes 2022 Most Customer-Centric Companies List. With a continued focus on its people-first values, industry-leading customer care, technology and innovation, Carvana has become the second-largest used automotive retailer in the U.S. and one of the fastest companies to debut on the Fortune 500. The company serves more than 80% of the U.S. population across more than 300 markets.
